

A pleasing array of subalpine wildflowers: food for the soul.

Flower Power

by Steve Eginoire

Ahh, July in the mountains. What could be healthier than a whimsical summer stroll through one of Mother Nature's own flower gardens? Bring a date, bring a dog, or better yet, bring a chair and gel with your surroundings, because wildflowers like this don't last forever. Here's a gander at nearby Mountain View Crest, where acres upon acres of sub alpine meadows are putting on quite the show.

The delicate and aptly named fairy trumpet flower.

A timeless classic, the sunflower.

Monk's hood.

Mountain death camas.

Penstemon and bee.
