

The now-infamous Ponderosa Hole claims another crew of paddlers.

Opting for the ultra classic far right line usually only has one ending.

In the drink

by Stephen Eginore

When adrenaline runs as high as the river, when your pale bare skin is immersed in 40-degree ice water for a prolonged swim, when you lose all of your gear much to the delight of a jeering crowd. Raft carnage! As the Animas River delivers peak flows for the season, area rubber pushers take a stab at not flipping. Here's a look:

Having your captain ejected is just one of the many, many scenarios rafters can plan on encountering during a run through the Whitewater Park.

Diving in after a swimmer: never a good idea.

Whoops.

Clinging helplessly to a flipped ducky.

How to punch the meat: keep it square and push!
