

Spin Me Right Round

by Jennaye Derge

For many of us, the source of our music doesn't matter a great deal – as long as we can hear the melodies, beats and lyrics that we love singing along to. For a few though, nothing quite compared to the experience of listening to vinyl. There is a certain quality in analog that you can't find in anything else, record purists say, and at last Saturday's bi-annual Durango Record Collectors Swap – put on in conjunction with Southwest Sound – there were many things to find that couldn't be found anywhere else. Crates of records brought by collectors and lovers of the classics lined the room at the VFW where anyone could come sift through and marvel over the retro cover art and find their own personal treasure – or just something to sing along with.

Angela Wilson picks up a potential winner at the Southwest Sound table.

There was no shortage of options during Saturday's record swap at the VFW.

Jim Kanagy tries to find something special.

Like finding old friends

For the treasure seeker, there were a few mint-condition, one-of-a-kinds.

Categories galore!